Fund Manager Comment

March 2026 proved to be one of the most volatile months for global markets in recent years, dominated by escalating geopolitical tensions in the Middle East following the U.S.-Iran conflict. Major U.S. equity indices posted significant declines, with the S&P 500 falling roughly 5%, the Nasdaq dropping around 5-7% (briefly entering correction territory), and the Dow similarly retreating amid broad selling pressure. Energy prices surged as oil spiked above $100 per barrel on supply disruption fears, boosting the energy sector sharply while reigniting inflation concerns and pushing Treasury yields higher initially, though growth worries later prompted some moderation. A clear market rotation unfolded, with value stocks, small caps, utilities, materials, and international/emerging markets showing relative resilience or outperformance compared to mega-cap growth and technology names, which faced heavy selling.

On the portfolio front, Class A, Class B, and Class C shares all experienced negative performance in line with the broader market weakness. For the month, Class A returned -4.9%, Class B -5.65%, and Class C -7.69%. Year-to-date through March, the figures stood at -4.5% for Class A, -4.72% for Class B, and -6.87% for Class C, reflecting varying levels of exposure to the pressured growth and technology segments amid the risk-off environment.
